GASOLINE TAX HAS LANDED IN COURT

SUITS FILED BY SECRETARY OF AUTOMOBILE ASSOCIATION

In One Case Plaintiff Seeks to Enjoin the Secretary From Collecting the Tax and the Other to Compel Secretary of State to Issue License at Reduced Price.

Two broadsides have been leveled at the gasoline tax in Ohio. Both took the form of court actions, one in the Franklin county common pleas court and the other in the supreme court.

One would enjoin all collection of the tax, the other would force Secretary of State Thad H. Brown to grant quarterly reductions on license tags issued for passenger cars subsequent to the first quarter of the year.

Suits Follow Ruiling.

They came immediately after Attorney General C. C. Crabbe had ruled that, under the Brown law, which levied the gasoline tax and re-enacted and amended provisions of the General code relating to license tags for passenger cars, purchasers of license tags for pleasure automobiles are entitled to no reduction in the price of the tags irrespective of the time of such purchase.

The first suit to be filed was that of C. C. Janes and the Ohio State Automobile association against the State Tax commission, the auditor of state, the treasure rof state, the secretary of state and the Central Ohio Oil company. This action seeks to enjoin the state or any of its agencies from collecting the tax.

The other suit is by Mr. Janes against Secretary of State Thad H. Brown. It was filed in supreme court before Chief Justice Carrington T Marshall and seeks to mandamus Mr. Brown to issue a license tag for a low power automobile for $6 or at a reduction of 25 per cent from the regular price of the tag. Janes is secretary of the Ohio State Automobile association.

Chief Justice Marshall allowed an alternative writ, returnable May 2, or before, under which the secretary of state must show cause why a permancent writ of mandamus should not be issued against him.

According to petition, the secretary of state refused to issue a license to Janes and that he is without remedy at law and therefore desires to have the secretary of state ordered to issue a license to him.

Attorneys J. P. Atwood, C. D. Saviers and W. D. Meals filed the petition.

The petition filed by Mr. Janes and the Ohio State Automobile association in common pleas court alleges that the Brown law is unjust, discriminatory and unconstitutional in that it does not require owners of automobiles purchased after January 1, to file application for registration and pay registration fees until next January, and that it relates to more than one subject.

According to the pleading, Mr. Janes sued as a citizen and taxpayer the owner of two automobiles and the Ohio State Automobile association sued as a non profit organization and taxpayer representing the interests of approximately 135,000 motorists of the state who are members of the association.

Parties made defendants in the action are C. A. Horn, S. E. Forney and John R. Cassidy, members of the state tax commission; Auditor of State Joseph T. Tracy; Secretary of State Thad H. Brown; Treasurer of State Harry S. Day and the Central Ohio Oil company.

The oil company is named because it is made a collector of the gasoline tax under the provisions of the Brown law and because, since the law became effective, the company has refused to sell gasoline to the plaintiffs without charging a two cent tax, under the provisions of the law, "which is unconstitutional and void and of no force and effect."

IN MEMORIAM

Editor Union-Herald:—Jane Eliza Miller, daughter of Dr. J. M. and Louisa Miller, was born at the old Miller homestead near Marshall, Ohio, March 18 1858, and died at the home of her sister, Mrs. Fannie M. Crabb, in Circleville, April 21, 1925, at 5:18 a. m.

She was a woman of sterling, Christian character, and her loyalty to church, friends and relatives was one of her outstanding qualities.

She was a lifelong and faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal church and was interested in the work of the church but having been an invalid the greater part of her life, she was prevented by physical disability from doing the many things that her heart prompted.

Her last illness was of short duration and the end came in peaceful sleep.

LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEES ARE SELECTED

One to Study Election Laws And the Other Question of State Printing.

Secretary of State Thad H. Brown will appoint Ray J. Hillebrand, Cincinnati; A. J. Hirstius, Cleveland, and J. C. Hanley, East Liverpool, as members of the committee to recodify the election laws of Ohio, it was reported unofficially Saturday night. The appointments will be made early next week.

Together with the secretary of state's appointees the following legislators will serve on the committee; Senators J. R. Gardner, Cincinnati; C. C. Chappelear, Circleville, and H. M. Carpenter, Steubenville, and Representatives M. S. Dodd, Toledo; H. S. Keifer, Springfield, and C. E. Knapp, Medina county.

One of the last acts of the senate was the adopton of a resolution by Senator James R. Hopley of Bucyrus, providing for the appointment of a committee to study the question of state printing.

Lieutenant Governor Lewis appointed as such committee; Senator Hopley chairman and Senator Harry M. Carpenter, of Steubenville, and Senator C. C. Chappelear, of Circleville.

EVERYONE IS LAW VIOLATOR SAYS THE DEAN

Criminal Should Not be Applied to Acts Not Involving Moral Turpitude.

Dean S. H. Richards, of the law department of Wisconsin university, makes the sweeping assertion that everybody is a law violator.

The worst of it is that he proves his case, technically. So called criminal laws are so multifarious and contain so many inhibitions, that mortal can not move nor breathe without breaching them. The preacher drives to his pulpit to denounce the iniquities of the shiner and the bootlegger; he himself is a law breaker, because the act of driving constitutes manual labor and therefore violates the Sunday law. Incidentally he commits two offenses because he either exceeds the speed limits or cuts the corners. Every car owner and that includes well nigh everybody will do and does do the same lawless acts.

Dean Richards is cautious in his use of words. You'll notice he is careful not to say, and in that respect he sets a most admirable example, that because an individual breaks the statute he is a criminal. Generally the word criminal is altogether too loosely applied. It ought not to be used unless the act alleged includes some degree of moral turpitude As the dean agrees with us that practically all of us are law violators, he will also agree that breaking the law is, in itself, no moral wrong—to be a moral wrong, to be, in fact, criminal, the law broken must be one prohibiting an immoral act.

In other words the law legislative enactments, can no more make an act not immoral in itself, such by punishing it than it can make an immoral act moral.

What is wrong was fixed by Jehovah himself when he gave the Ten Commandments to Moses, written on graven stone to signify that none but He could alter or change their injunctions and their inhibitions. He who violates them pays the inescapable penalty. Man makes statutes for his own comfort. He who violates them takes the chances of paying the penalty, rather remote.—Portsmouth Times.

ALARM 41 TURNED IN.

Alarm 41 was turned in Saturday evening. Smoke was noticed in the office of the Watchman and it was thought that the building was on fire Upon investigation it was found that smoke was coming from a metal pot used on a casting machine. There was no loss.

DROWNINGS AND SUICIDE AT COLUMBUS

Columbus, April 27 (UP.)—Two drownings and a suicide were among the tragic deaths occuring in this locality over the weekend.

Ernest Bergner 19, Capital university student, drowned when seized with cramps while swimming in Spring Lakes. Waldo Cole, 16, of Lockbourne fainted while fishing and drowned in four inches of water in Big Walnut creek near his home. Guy W. Conrad, 58, hurled himself into the path of a Pennsylvania passenger train and was ground to death. He had been a State hospital patient.

KIRBY INDICTED.

Cleveland, Apri 25 (UP.)--The special state grand jury today indicted Josiah Kirby again.

The founder and former president of the big Cleveland discount company was accused of theft of company stocks.

He probably will be arraigned next week.

A jury several weeks ago acquitted Kirby of issuing a false financial statement.

Gəneral Happenings Taken From the Records of the Various County Offices.

Divorce Decree Withheld.

In the divorce suit of Mabel Helmick against Sumner E. Helmick and Arthur G. Helmick, guardian of an insane person in which the plaintiff claims and charges extreme cruelty, before the defendant was committed to an asylum. Judge Adkins of the probate court before whom the case was tried rendered a decree to the plaintiff, but is withholding the same until an answer is filed by the guardian. Barton Walters represented the plaintiff.

Minors in Court.

A. S. Owens, a Pennsylvania railroad detective from Zanesville filed charges of malicious destruction of property against Thomas White, aged 13; Daniel Brannan, aged 12; Ernest Dowler, aged 15 and Harley Bush aged 15. before Judge Adkins in juvenile court.

The accused and seven other boys who live in the south section of town were brought into court Saturday. It developed that the four boys mentioned had broken four hundred glass insulators on telegraph poles since January 1, 1925. They had also amused themselves by breaking the glass bull's eyes of railroad switches. The boys were given a thoro grilling and if the acts are repeated they will be sent to the Industrial school at Lancaster.

Plaintiff Loses.

In the case of Cecil Williams against Albert Eddings and William Minshall, of Derby, which was tried in common pleas court last week and in which the plaintiff sued the defendants for $5,500 personal damages owing to the fact that he was struck by an auto in Harrisburg n September, 1922, the jury found for the defendants Bradshaw & Bradshaw, of Columbus, and Abernethy & Simkins, of this city, represented the plaintiff and H. M. Crabbe and E W. Johnson of London and Meeker Terwilliger, of this city, represented the defendants.

Divorce Suits Filed.

Cora May Giffen has filed in common pleas court a suit for divorce from George W. Giffen The parties were married in Chillicothe June 9, 1919. The plantiff charges the defendant with extreme cruelty. She asks for the custody of their children. Abernethy & Simkins represented the plaintiff.

Lena Hurley has filed in common pleas court a suit for divorce from Oscar Hurley. The couple was married March 26, 1921, and have two children. She charges abandonment and gross neglect and asks for the custody of their children and alimony. Abernethy & Simkins represent the plaintiff.

Idea of Growing Old Far From Ike Farnum

Ike Farnum was sitting around with me the other day. Just talking. There had been too little rain and too much fire in the woods for us to take our annual deer hunt this year, and we were mourning about it. Ike had just finished telling me of the Springfield rifle he had just had resighted.

"Stripped those military monstrosities off and put on a peep," Ike said.

When in came Maurice Munn. Getting a bit fat, is Maurice, and a shade gray and he wears glasses. Otherwise quite all right. He listened to the concluding stanzas of Ike's epic and then hurled his wet blanket.

"It's just as well you didn't go hunting," said he. "When a man gets to be fifty years old his hunting days are over. It's time for him to buy a bird dog and a scatter gun and stay near the shore."

Well, sirs, and ladies, I have never seen or heard Ike in better form. He passed his fiftieth birthday more than one year ago, but if he is a day over thirty-five you'll have to lick him to make him own up. He is as young and alive today as he ever was, except that he is harder to kill than a boy is. A middle-aged man who has kept himself in good condition gets to be like dry rawhide. He can't be cut, torn or stretched.

"I'd have been as fatheaded an old fool as you are, Maurice," said Ike, "if I'd let myself slip the way you have. The trouble with you is that you quit this life when you got to be fifty and haven't reached the life to come. No wonder you're old! You act old and think old and talk old. If I ever said to myself—

"'I'm too old to go a-hunting'—

"Well, I'd be too old to go a-hunting. But I haven't said it and I never will."

Yet I can remember that a few years ago Maurice was tougher and faster and harder than Ike Farnum ever thought of being. He has just thought himself into age.—"J. P." in Kansas City Star.

YANKS FIND TOMB OLDER THAN TUT'S

New Discovery Goes Back to Fourth Dynasty.

Boston.—A cable received by Dr. George A. Reisner, professor of Egyptology at Harvard and director of the Harvard university-Boston Museum of Fine Arts Egyptian exposition definitely establishes the tomb just discovered by the expedition near the Giza pyramids as being some 1,700 years older than the tomb of Tut-Ankh-Amen and of a period of which little has been discovered heretofore.

The cable was from Alan Rowe, chief assistant of the expedition, an Australian who has been working with Doctor Reisner for three years.

Dated About 3,000 B. C.

The text of the cable, as extended by Doctor Reisner, was made public as follows:

"The new tomb reported from the excavations of the Harvard-Boston expedition at Giza is the only important intact tomb yet found previous to Dynasty VI. It is to be dated to the time of King Seneferu, the first king of Dynasty IV, the predecessor of Cheops, that is, a period of 100 years up to about 3000 B. C.

"The new tomb is situated about 100 meters due east of the great pyramid of Cheops. During the final clearing of the rock surface a patch of white plaster was noted which covered masonry consisting of massive blocks laid in plaster. On removing the plaster a stairway was disclosed filled with blocks of stone, also laid in plaster.

Find Alabaster Sarcophagus.

"At 8 meters down the shaft a closed recess was found in the shaft wall which consisted of a bull's head and legs, matting and pots. At 26 meters the top of the burial chamber was reached on the south side of the shaft. The bottom of the shaft was reached at 30 meters.

"On removing the top course of stone in the masonry block which closed the door of the burial chamber the chamber was seen to be about 18 feet long by 12 feet wide. Inside was an alabaster sarcophagus intact and on the coffin lay an elaborate woven gold mat with a line of incised hieroglyphics, giving the name Nebti-Seneferu, which seems to be the name of the person buried in the coffin. The name indicates that she was a lady, probably a princess.

"The posts of the sarcophagus are sheathed in gold and the floor of the chamber is covered with vessels of bronze and alabaster and a quantity of gilded wooden furniture which is in bad condition.

"This tomb is not that of either Seneferu or Cheops. It was in existence when the first pyramid at Giza, that of Cheops, was built, and the superstructure of the tomb must have been cleared away by the architects of Cheops when they built the causeway which led from the valley to the temple in front of the Cheops pyramid. The tomb is to be dated probably to the reign of Seneferu."

Whale Wrecks $5,000 Fish Nets Off Alaska

Cordova, Alaska.—A whale chasing a school of herring into a lagoon during high tide at Kachemak bay, Seldovia, found itself trapped. Before it followed a gasoline boat three weeks later out of the lagoon toward the North Pacific ocean it damaged more than $5,000 worth of fishing nets after being wounded by hundreds of bullets, Fish Commissioner William P. Studdert recounted on his return here.

The lagoon, noted as one of the finest herring banks on Cook inlet, crowded with fishermen during the season, is four miles long and two wide. It is connected to Kachemak bay by a narrow, shallow channel.

Twelve nets were destroyed the first day the whale made its appearance. Fishermen, aided by Commissioner Studdert, trained every shotgun in camp on the whale as it sped from one end of the lagoon to the other without finding exit. Hundreds of nets were ruined before it followed a small boat through the channel.

Washington Portrait by Stuart Given to London

New York.—Edward S. Harkness recently added to his many public gifts by presenting to the National Portrait gallery, London, one of the celebrated portraits of George Washington by Gilbert Stuart. The picture is known as the Pinckney portrait from the well known southern family of that name.

The portrait is a bust likeness of the Athenaeum type, so-called from the original example in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. It has already reached its destination and has been placed in room 12 of the London gallery, in company with four other portraits by Stuart, among which are those of Benjamin West and Mrs. Siddons. It keeps company also with celebrated portraits by Reynolds, Rommey, Gainsborough, Lawrence and their contemporaries.

80 and 70 Love at First Sight, Wed Same Hour

Parkersburg, W. Va.—Bartholomew Lott, eighty, and Mrs. Carrie Lambert, seventy, were married in the Wood county courthouse, a few minutes after they had first met. Each went to the courthouse on a different mission. Becoming acquainted, they were seen talking quietly together for a short time. Then they stepped into the county clerk's office and applied for a marriage license.

Pigeons as Telephones

With every outgoing tourist car that invades the little-known parts of the National park around the Grand Canyon of Colorado now go a pair of homing pigeons. They are the only feasible means of communication in an emergency, for there is no telephone or telegraph service in that part of the country.

Evolution of Trombone

The trombone, from the Italian "tromba," a trumpet, was formerly called the sackbut, and is a brass instrument, of uncertain invention and epoch, though it appears in a manuscript of the Ninth century, preserved at Boulogne, as a drawing bearing a great resemblance to the trombone of today without its bell.—Music World.

Queer Human Nature

It does seem passing strange that the more you befriend some fellows the harder they know you when your back is turned.

Boy's Real Gallantry

Sir Walter Raleigh, in all his glory, never outdid a boy, about fifteen years of age, who, when it was raining the hardest, stood in water above his ankles and, after obtaining some boards and placing them from the building shed to the sidewalk in front of the new Selig building in West Washington street, stood there and aided girls and women across the planks.

H. E. McArthy, 622 Continental National Bank building, who reported the incident, said that it was one of the most gentlemanly acts he had ever witnessed. "He may have been a boy scout doing his daily good turn, but whoever he is and whatever he is, I'm for him," he said.—Indianapolis News.

Never Blotted a Line

Of Shakespeare it is said that he never blotted a line, so perfect was his command of his native tongue. How much of truth there is in this popular belief it is impossible to determine.

Made Shrine of Garments

They tell an affecting little story of French soldiers. It seemed that some one of the various headless—or rather hydra-headed—charitable organizations operating from our great country got its donations mixed, and a French regiment just out of the trenches, in place of some boxes of warm underclothing expected, got some children's clothes.

There was some idle jesting, some growling; but in the end that regiment built an altar, enshrined upon it the little garments designed for children whom they might never see again, and the whole regiment passed before it, and one at a time knelt and renewed their oath of allegiance to fair France and the vow to expel the invader from her soil.—From the War Diary of Maj. Gen. James G. Harboard in the Saturday Evening Post.

Straight Lined Beaded Frock Featuring Fringe

Especially youthful in appeal is this charming straight-line beaded frock of peach georgette, which makes a beaded double-fringed overskirt the principal attraction.

Few Are Familiar With Shoes by Common Name

"Ask a customer if she wants oxfords or ties, sandals or pumps, and—simple as it may sound—you'd be surprised how few women can give a definite and helpful answer to the salesman," says a big shoe dealer whose business it is to satisfy scores of perplexed shoppers every day. Shopping after shoes would be a much simpler problem if women took the trouble to familiarize themselves with the different kinds of shoes carried in the shoe department.

Bringing the question straight home to ourselves, did you know, for instance, that oxfords, strictly speaking, are low shoes with three or more eyelets or buttons? And that if they have one or two eyelets they are called "ties?"

A "pump" is a low shoe, with a perfectly plain surface, no fastening of any kind, a thin sole, and, in those for men, a low heel.

Shots for sports or walking are of the "brogue" type, with low heels and leather or rubber soles. A brogue is a heavy walking shoe, usually on the oxford order, with elaborate perforations, foxing and winged tip.

Bluchers are laced shoes in which the tongue and vamp are in one piece, the quarters extending over the vamp from one-half to one inch.

Colonial pumps are low shoes that have a flare tongue extending out and above the throat of the shoe, and having a buckle across the waist. A "tongue pump" is one that has a small pointed tongue that does not extend much above the throat of the shoe.

"Bal" is an abbreviation of the English term Balmoral, which merely means a laced shoe. "Ballet slippers" are those worn by professional dancers, and of lightweight kid, with thin sole, no heel, and no decoration.

Congress gaiters are shoes that come just above the ankle, with a leather or cloth top without buttons or lacing, but are adjusted to the ankle by a gusset of rubber goring.

Sandal shoes refer to a pump with one, two or three straps.

Old ladies' shoes are made of some soft kid with flat heels and usually have no toe boxing or "soft toes."

In the house-slipper line: "Juliets" are loose-fitting slippers, high in front and low at the sides. Martha Washingtons are practically the same as Juliets. "Mules" are boudoir slippers with a high heel, sole and vamp, but no quarter or counter.

Simplicity Tests Skill of Ordinary Seamstress

The simplicity that distinguishes the fashions of the day is often a most deceiving simplicity, for the effect is achieved by a skill far more subtle than that necessary to design a much more elaborate costume.

The test of a designer lies in knowing what to leave off, not what to add to a frock in the way of ornamentation, and to make each detail count for something in the attainment of that appearance of simplicity that is as smart as it is sophisticated.

In these amazingly simple gowns, cut is everything and what may seem to be detail that anyone could copy, often turns out to be decidedly tricky and difficult.

A noticeable feature of several of the newest frocks is the use of apron drapery, and while some are merely gathered or plaited affairs others are most ingenious and too complicated for the home dressmaker to duplicate.

Dinner Dresses Use Lace

Several of the smartest dinner dresses recently seen are made of black lace with touches of cream or brown lace mounted over flesh-color slips.

CHILDREN'S MAY DAY

The plans approved by President Coolidge for National Child Health Day are being enthusiastically developed throughout the country. The President said:

"I am confident that the people will be glad to make May Day the occasion of rededicating themselves to the happy task of safeguarding our most precious asset—35,000,000 children."

Will the people of America be glad to do this? Yes, and again yes, and with all the earnestness and emphasis inspired by a supreme affection.

In an older day children danced around the May pole—flowers, children and laughter comprised a sweet and inspiring trinity. But in that day many and many little ones died, as the flowers die, all too soon. But today science offers much to allay parental solicitude if proper application is made of the wealth of knowledge at hand.

The President re-enunciates the rational formula: Co-operation between state and municipal health officers and school authorities, securing co-operation of influential organizations like the General Federation of Women's Clubs, National Congress of Parents and Teachers, American Red Cross, American Legion, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, National Tuberculosis Association—in a word, all churches, all organizations, all individuals.

Co-operation is the word. Thirty-five millions of children represent inconceivable potentialities. About them is an enveloping affection strong enough to work wonderful things, if only that love be properly directed to secure the well-being of its objectives. Ignorant affection may be as murderous as deadly hatred.

But the nation now has abundant knowledge, medical science is at the peak of its centuried advancement, and child life and health may be conserved and assured as never before. But with all available knowledge, scientific and otherwise; with all the moral advancement there still is much to be done. Hence the emphasis being put on the observance of Child Health Day.

According to Dr. George T. Palmer, Director of Research of the American Child Health Association, too many babies still are dying, too many children withering away. He says investigation in eighty-six cities throughout the United States shows seven mothers give up their lives for every thousand babies born and that in some of the cities 10 per cent of the babies die. This is why twenty organizations, with a membership of more than 10,000,000, soon will be devoting intense effort in the matter of child health and mother protection. It is why the President approves and proclaims Child Health Day. Each citizen should do his part to make observance of the day something more than a perfunctory act.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Model Chapel Cars

One of the latest contributions, and not the least interesting, to the Vatican missionary exposition, held in connection with the Anno Santo, consists of models of "chapel cars" operated in America by the Catholic Church Extension society. The contribution is made in the name of the society by Edward F. Carry of the Pullman company. It reproduces in miniature, but in the most exact details, the traveling chapels, whereby the society brings the ministrations of the church to residents of distant sections that cannot maintain permanent church buildings. Three such cars are in operation on American railroads.

His Decision

"Say, what the dickens is all that yelling about, out back of the smokehouse?" demanded Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge, aroused from his doze on the porch.

"Maw was making soft soap and got her dress afire," replied Banty, one of Johnson's offspring. "She's rolling on the ground now, trying to put it out, and the children are watching her and hollering about it."

"Aw, well, if I want any dinner I reckon I'd better go and help her."—Kansas City Star.

The time is passed when the measure of the value of a memorial is quantity. I hope the time has come when that measure is quality. I care not whether the material be marble or granite, its future will be measured by the character of the design. It is quality that has preserved for us the finest examples in painting and sculpture. It is quality that will stamp our imprint upon cemeteries of the future. Simplicity, correct lines and proportions and proper ornamentation are the real fundamentals. A design that is right, material that is lasting, and perfect workmanship, spells success for the future of this industry and the beautification of the cemetery. Will you let me help you select the memorial for your lot. Call at show room. NO AGENTS.

CLINT SHOOK RETURNED TO HIS OLD LOVE

Appointed by Judge Bostwick Chief Probation Officer of Franklin County.

After eight years' absence, Clinton B. Shook, 84 fourteenth avenue, Columbus, returns to Franklin county juvenile court as chief probation officer. His appointment becomes effective Friday, with the resignation of John A. Ellis, who has held that position since Shook left.

Resignation of Ellis, according to Judge Bostwick, was voluntary, and no connection with the recent investigation and shakeup in juvenile court. Ellis, who is an attorney said he intends practicing law.

Shook has been active in political affairs almost since he was qualified to vote. He formerly was superintendent of schools at Ashville, deputy auditor of Pickaway county, clerk at the Ohio penitentiary, deputy sheriff under Al Sartain and recently chief bailiff of municipal court. He is a graduate of Ohio Northern university, an attorney and a member of Indianola M. E. church, where he teaches the Men's Bible class.

Between 1912 and 1916, while Judge E. B. Kinkead was head of the juvenile court. Shook was chief probation officer.

PITY IN BIRD LIFE RARELY DISPLAYED

Feathered Creatures, When Hurt, Left to Die Alone.

"There is not much sympathy to be found in wild nature. If a bird meets with a mishap it is usually left to get over it without any assistance from its companions. When a bird is taken ill and expects to die you will not find its mate standing by to console with it, but the suffering creature will just slink away to a place of hiding in which to meet the end, while the bird which is left will very soon find a new companion. But I have come across a few instances where sympathy was shown. When birds are mated after a short courtship the male is most attentive to his newly won wife and will almost starve himself to offer tit-bits to her," writes Oliver G. Pike in the London Mail.

"The beautiful male bullfinch is one of the best of husbands. A pair of these birds attempted to nest in my garden last spring. The first nest came to an untimely end and a second was built. When this contained young almost ready to fly I heard the two parents calling out in great distress. I hurriedly climbed up the steep bank leading to the nest in a thick hedge, but I was just too late, for a stoat dashed from the nest and disappeared in the thick undergrowth. Three of the young had been eaten, while the fourth was dead outside the nest.

"For days afterward the hen bullfinch sat on twigs in the garden looking most disconsolate, and it was rather beautiful to see the male offer her choice morsels, which he continually searched for. It seemed as if he was doing his best to cheer her up, and it gave me much pleasure when I found out that he had succeeded. For at the end of the week they began a third nest, and with this they were successful in rearing a family.

"It is only natural, however, for a bird to assist its mate during the time of courtship. It is in the winter months, when each bird has to fight its own battle in the grim search for food, that sympathy is rare. I have known only one instance of this.

"In my garden there was a large dog kennel with a flat roof. During the winter months the tablelike top was utilized as a larder for the birds. Many kinds visited us and it was seldom that the table was unoccupied. One morning a new visitor appeared and she was a cripple. This great tit had one leg missing and she had some trouble in balancing her body as she picked up the food.

"The sparrows, for some reason, objected to the presence of this injured bird and drove her off. She made many attempts to obtain a meal, but the others prevented her.

"The next morning she brought with her another great tit and again the sparrows tried to drive her away. In a flash the second great tit set about them, fought the whole flock and kept the board clear while the crippled bird obtained a good meal. On each succeeding visit this birdland knight accompanied her, and such respect did the sparrows have for his fighting powers that she afterward obtained her food in peace."

Creatures That Take the Palm for Ugliness

A writer describes the two earth pigs, or aard varks, at the zoological gardens, London, as nightmares, says Christopher Bark in the Family Herald, and certainly, for sheer hideousness they can give points and a beating to almost any other four-legged animal. Their nearest rival is probably the wart hog, with its fantastic tusks and huge wen or wart underneath each eye. Another mammal which is so utterly ugly that it makes one feel uncomfortable to look at it is the so-called naked bat (chiromeles torquatus). The body is stark naked, with a hideously greased black skin. Head and face are also naked except for a few scanty clusters of stiff hairs which grow out of wart-line excrescences. Around the neck is a collar of dingy brown hair resembling a mangy fur tippet.

The creature is not only repulsive to sight, but also to the sense of smell. It is a sort of winged skunk, the odor of which is literally sickening.

Among reptiles there are a number so fantastically hideous that no mere description can do justice to their looks, or lack of them.

The palm in this respect belongs to the horrid moloch of Australia, commonly known as the "Thorny Devil."

This is a stumpy lizard about eight inches long, of a dirty yellow color, with muddy brown patches. From the tip of its nose to the end of its tail it is covered with spines which are of all shapes and sizes. The largest grow upon its head and show up like two curved horns. Its feet are armed with strong, sharp claws.

The frilled lizard, another Australian reptile, lives on its looks. If alarmed, it gets upon its hind legs and instantly spreads an enormous ruff. It lashes its snake-like tail and opens a mouth full of needle-like teeth.

The octopus, incarnation of horror, is as dangerous as it looks. The sting ray, a hideous creature, has a powerful tail armed with a sharp spine which exudes poison like a snake's fang. Tropic seas are full of fish of fantastic shapes armed with terrible spines and long threatening teeth. Not all these are bad as they look, yet as a general rule an ugly fish is also a dangerous one.

THE CLEAN UP AND PAINT UP CAMPAIGN ON

Circleville's Week is From May 4 to 9—Don't Fail to Do Your Part.

E. B. Berry, superintendent of Insurance, Southern Railway system, in an article in the Southern News Bulletin entitled "Clean Up and Paint Up" says:

"When you consider the benefical results obtained from the 'Clean Up and Pant Up Campaign', including as it does moral and mental profit, systematic living, reduction of labor and expense, with increased results, the development of the child by observation and contact with clean and orderly surroundngs, all presenting a condition to stimulate an interest in home staying with practically no outlay of money, it is obvious that a campaign carried on from year to year, by setting aside a certain period for the 'Clean Up and Paint Up Campaign' will gather more exponents in ratio to the frequency of the campaign, until it becomes the general custom, and every day will become 'Clean Up and Paint Up Day.'

"Cleanliness is the first and necessary requisite in reducing maintenance cost, not only in upkeep of property but in reduction of fire waste, loss of life and premium cost. It is essential to a greater output in office and factory, for without it, effective and harmonious working conditions cannot be obtained. Well-kept, fresh and attractive looking homes, shops, offices, etc., create an atmosphere appealing to the homeseeker and investor alike. Values are enhanced, and the community generally becomes aggressive with larger interests in civic and company affairs. Your friends increase and you become a person with whom social intercourse is desirable.

Circleville's campaign starts Monday, May 4, and lasts one week. Do your part to make it a success.

EGG RECORDS IN FEBRUARY AND MARCH

Mrs. Wardell's Flock Was First and Miss McKenzie's Second—A Close Race.

Poultry demonstration flock owners should feel very proud of their splendid egg records for February and March. The benefits of the demonstration flock records due to the careful study of their work and of information furnished by the Farm Bureau and Ohio State university will be lasting.

These flocks are very decidedly on a paying basis which we realize is not general over the country. Accurate records of all costs, sales, and daily egg production are kept enabling the flock owners to summarize the business at the end of the year.

February records show Mrs. E. H. Wardell's flock overaged 12.6 eggs per hen and Miss Mary McKenzie's flock averaged 11.5 eggs per bird. Mrs Wardell has 220 hens and Miss McKenzie 364.

In March Mrs. Wardell's flock averaged 19.5 eggs per hen and Mary McKenzie's 19.3. This is a close race. Watch for the April report.

Anyone who wishes may record their daily production and report to the Farm Bureau at the end of the month.

Prudes of the Past

Author Frank Harris, the guest of honor at a literary banquet in New York, said in his speech of acknowledgment:

"American literature used to be very prudish. We've changed all that, thank goodness. But our prudishness in the past was so extreme that it reminds me of the girls' boarding school.

"The principal of a girls' boarding school was taking her charges through a picture gallery.

When half way through she halted and said:

"'Attention, young ladies! The next apartment is devoted to the nude. In passing the door you will all please lower your eyes, avert your heads, quicken your pace and blush."—Detroit Free Press.

Back to Normalcy

Ole Svenson, after having lived by himself and prepared his own meals for years, had taken a wife. Mrs. Svenson proceeded to live with her husband for the better part of two months, after which she ran away to the city. "Well, Ole," said a friend some time after the lady's departure, "are you sorry she went?"

"No," replied Ole. "No? Why not?" "Well," was the reply, "she was always getting in the way when I was cooking."

A Shock

A bishop was paying a visit to a certain parish and decided to stay on for the afternoon in order to address the children of the Sunday school. He had noticed many large bills about, referring to "the Bishop's Visitation" and accordingly began his talk by asking the assembled children the meaning of the word "visitation." "Please, sir," replied a young urchin, "it's a plague sent by God."

Variety of Food in China

Vegetables are used much more freely by the Chinese people than by the Americans. In addition to the common ones, such as potatoes, spinach, cabbage, radishes, and the like, many plants and weeds are eaten which are not usually considered as food in America. Thus radish leaves, shepherd's purses, bamboo sprouts and a large number of seaweeds are used as food.

Thomas Lynch, one of the youngest signers of the Declaration of Independence in 1776, was lost at sea in 1779. He was born in 1749, and was not quite twenty-seven when he signed as delegate for South Carolina.

AMUSEMENTS

"The Bandolero," a romance of Spain in which the vendetta of parents and the love of a boy and girl are woven against a background of bullfights and mountain brigandage, is due at the Met theater Monday. This photodrama which was photographed in Cuba and in natural locations in Spain, is based on the novel by Paul Gwynne and was adapted and directed by Tom Terriss.

Pedro de Cordoba has the title role of Dorando, the Bandolero, or brigand chief, who is a Spanish version of Robin Hood. He has been driven to outlawry by his discovery that the Marques de la Torre (Gustav van Seyffertiz) is making unwelcome love to his wife, who is killed in the fight that follows. Dorando sends his daughter (Renee Adoree) away to be brought up by a servant. Then, as the first step in his sworn revenge, he kidnaps the marques' son, Roman (Manuel Granado) whom he hides away in the moutains—but not so far from his daughter's retreat that the young persons do not meet and fall in love with one another. Then the hatred of the fathers and the love of their children work to a dramatic climax.

Others in the cast are Gordon Begg, Dorothy Ruth, Arthur Donaldson, Maria Valray and Jose Rueda. It is a Metro-Goldwyn picture. Mr. Terriss wrote the adaptation from Paul Gwynne's famous novel.

POWER OF THE PRESS.

Aaron Sapiro has been able to have published in almost every newspaper in the United States a statement that he has sued the Dearborn Publishing Co., for a million dollars.

We have a statement from the Dearborn Independent Publishing company that no suit had been filed up to April 11, altho at that time the newspaper publicity had been publishing for a fact, Aaron Sapiro's statement that he had sued them. To the best of our knowledge ths suit has not yet and probably never will be filed.

However, if you want to know the manner of Aaron Sapiro's operations in regard to cooperative farm organizations; subscribe to the Dearborn Independent and learn the facts. Read the best and most unbiased discussions of popular topics every week for $1.50 a year.

TINY ISLAND THAT UNCLE SAM FORGOT

Claims One of Philippines Now Under Dutch Rule.

Washington.—One of Uncle Sam's tiniest Philippine islands—at least he thinks it is his and is prosecuting his claim to it—is flourishing just now under the Dutch flag. An agreement between the United States and the Netherlands to arbitrate the question of the island's ownership has just been signed. A bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society says:

"It is conceivable that the 'Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe' might have known nothing about it if one of her offspring had wandered away. When the United States took over the Philippines from Spain in 1898 it acquired so many islands that, like the old woman, it didn't know what to do. The six or seven—or maybe eight or nine—thousand islands have never even been accurately counted, and more than 4,500 of them have no names. It is not strange, then, that one of the smaller and more remote islands, though it did have a name, Palmas, was neglected for many years.

"Few of the many Philippine islets are so isolated as Palmas. It lies 48 miles off the nearest point of Mindanao, Cape San Augustin, and is the farthest southeastern bit of land claimed to be a part of the Philippines. So neglected has the islet been that many maps do not show it, and most of the gazeteers pass its name by.

"Palmas (it is sometimes called Miangas) is only a little over half the size of Central park in New York city, being 1 1-3 miles long by 2-3 of a mile wide—a mere speck in the sea when its distance from large land bodies is considered. It lies about 20 miles west of the 127th meridian (east longitude), which forms the eastern boundary of the region ceded by Spain to the United States, and about 40 miles north of the parallel 4 degrees 45 minutes (north latitude), which forms the southern boundary. It is, therefore, well within the area marked out by the treaty for United States ownership.

First American Visit in 1906.

"There is no record of a visit by any official of the United States or the Philippines to Palmas until 1906, when Leonard Wood, then governor of the adjacent island of Mindanao, while on an inspection trip through the waters of his province, anchored off the island. To his surprise, the little boat that put off from the island village carried a Dutch flag. It was explained to him that the native headman held an appointment from the Dutch and that for 15 years Dutch ships had called once a year to bring supplies and take away copra. Four hundred and fifty-eight inhabitants were then on the islet.

"A report was duly made on this apparent alien occupation of American territory; the State department became interested and for 17 years the matter has been under consideration by the diplomats of the Netherlands, Spain and the United States.

"Palmas has had its 'flag incident.' In 1914 a zealous young American official sailed to the island, had the Dutch flag lowered and the Stars and Stripes run up, and then sailed away. Whether Old Glory flew for a matter of minutes or hours is not recorded, but on the next American visit some years later it was found, of course, that Dutch influence and control had in no wise been affected.

"Spain has been asked for an opinion on the ownership of Palmas and has answered that she acquired the island by discovery and that the American title, through Spain, should be good. But the Netherlands take a different view of it. 'How,' that country asks in substance, 'can Spain have sold that which is not hers?' The Netherlands' claim is that since the Dutch East India company first acquired interests in the East, natives of Palmas have acknowledged the suzerainty of native rulers to the south, who in turn have been subject to the Dutch. The northernmost island of undisputed Dutch ownership is Nanoesa, about 60 miles south of Palmas, and farther south lie the Sanguirs and Celebes.

A Coconut Paradise.

"Palmas is probably of volcanic origin like most of the adjacent islands. Encircling it, save for one small break, is a coral reef which tames the waters that beat in from the Pacific. The greater part of the island is low, some five feet above high water, but to the northeast rises a series of hills culminating in one 365 feet high. On lowland and highland alike grow coconuts, the source of the vegetable gold of Oceanica—copra.

"It is unlikely that the people of Palmas are greatly concerned over the Dutch-American dispute. Coconut trees require little attention. The fruit from three trees will support a family. The climate is delightful. Life is running along altogether smoothly and easily on the island that Uncle Sam forgot."

Slate in Family Since 1766

Stuttgart, Ark.—A slate which has been in the possession of the John family since 1766 is owned by Dr. M. C. John of Stuttgart. The slate is one-quarter of an inch thick and measures about 8 inches in width by 12 inches in length. Until about twenty years ago the slate had been unframed and had been kept in constant use in school by some member of the John family, so that it had been in service about 150 years.

WILL ROGERS WRITES ABOUT JOHN W. DAVIS

Two Democrats in Same Audience at One And The Same Time.

Will Rogers n last Sunday's Cincinnati Enquirer, among other things, says:

"I hope that new attorney general from Vermont lasts n the cabinet till I get down there. I want to see him but if he as big as they say he is, I certanly ain't going to have any jokes about him. He is one Bird that is going to be congratulated.

"And say, speaking about politicians and ex-politicians, guess who was in to see us last night—Mr. John W. Davis. I introduce him to the audience and it was really remarkable how they remembered him. They gave him a tremendous reception. And also there came in, but not with Mr. Davis, Barney Baruch, who underwrites the Democratic campaigns. I introduced him and, what do you know, when he stood up he had on his overcoat. I told him that was the most disgraceful thing ever happened in our place for a man to keep his overcoat on during the show. It was very uncomplimentary. But you can't blame Barney; he has had so much taken away from him I don't blame him for not laying his coat down any place. He may have been suspicious of Davis. I don't know. That's why the Democrats never get anywhere. They haven't got any two in the party that trust each other.

"Well, it certainly was a big night for us to have two Democrats in the same audience. The crowd demanded that Mr. Davis say something and wouldn't stop until he did. Well, to show you his sense of humor, he thanked them 'for their excellent memory' and said: 'You notice, Will, I have my coat off, I am still young enough to enjoy the show.' Well, the paying customers all enjoyed that.

"I told Mr. Davis that I felt i was lucky when he beat me for the nomination last summer, because I did not believe that even I could have beat Mr. Collidge last fall. I then told the folks about an exchange of telegrams whch I had with Mr. Davis after he had defeated me for the nomination. It showed the sense of humor this guy Davis has. I wired him: 'Congratulations on your nomination. Understand you are to be associated with one of the Bryan boys. For the Lord's sake pick out the right one.' Now I thought that was pretty good and it was—for me. But he come back with one that for humor and wit made a piker out of mine, he said: 'Thanks for your wire, Bill. I will not only pick the right one but will watch the other one.'

"He is a great fellow this man Davis, I doubt if there has ever been a more dignified, scholarly, learned, and capable man ever defeated for the presidency. But Lord, he is such a fine lawyer that a president's salary wouldn't have paid his income tax."

Selling Children in Peru

Legalized child slavery still exists in Peru—even in Lima, the modern capital city. Indian peons frequently sell their children to well-to-do families for sums equivalent to about $4.25. The sales are made usually when the children are about eight years old, and the purchasers have exclusive use and control of the children until they are sixteen years old in the case of a girl, or eighteen years if a boy. As long as the owner feeds and clothes the child no one can take it away. There have been recorded cases in which, when one woman sought to buy a child from another by offering the father of the child more money, the courts upheld the rights of the first mistress. Girls are sold more often than are boys, inasmuch as the Indians regard girl children as liabilities.

Airplane Still Novelty

"I tried recently in a Cleveland hotel to buy an airplane postage stamp for a letter to San Francisco," writes Fred Kelly in the Nation's Business. "The stamp seller had none and said it was the first time he had had such a request. Out of curiosity I then went to another leading hotel and tried to buy stamps for airplane mail. They not only didn't have such stamps, but evidently had never heard of them. I next tried the experiment of asking business men for information about the cost of sending a letter by airplane from Cleveland to New York. Of a score I asked not one knew! The fact is that the airplane mail service, notwithstanding the marvel of it, is still too new to be popular. It takes a long time for a novelty to sink into the public mind."

Cornelia Makes a Selection

By H. IRVING KING

(Copyright.)

CORNELIA BLIVIN was a spoiled child. Her father had amassed so much money that he could not tell exactly how rich he was himself. Her mother was a languid, drowsy, corpulent woman, who believed that "there was no joy but calm." Being an only child, heiress-apparent to her father's millions, Cornelia might have been married twenty times over if she had wanted to. But she didn't want to. Then suddenly she took it into her head that she did want to. "Mother," said she one day, "I am going to be married."

"Well, well, Corny," said the fond mother. "I suppose you are old enough to be married. Whom are you going to marry?"

"I have not decided yet," replied Cornelia.

"Got any special one in mind?" asked Mrs. Blivin.

"No, no one in particular—as yet. I have two dinners, two dances and a reception on this week and shall probably select somebody before Saturday," said Cornelia.

"Have you spoken to your father about this?" asked Mrs. Blivin.

"Not yet," replied Cornelia, "but I shall. Father won't object. He never has objected to anything I did yet, and it's pretty late in the game for him to begin now."

And Cornelia, who, when she had taken a resolution, was not in the habit of letting the grass grow under her feet, ordered out her own particular motor and went down to her father's office to tell him what he might expect. She regarded it as a mere matter of form—but Cornelia was rather a stickler for form.

"Father," she breezed when she was alone with her parent in his private office, "I am going to be married."

"Bless me, child!" said Blivin. "Who to?"

"Oh, I haven't decided yet. I shall this week," she warbled.

For the first time in his life Blivin displayed a tendency to go contrary to his daughter's wishes. "Hum," said he. "This is a serious matter. There are lots of fellows who would be anxious to marry you just to get at my money."

"Goodness gracious, father," cried Cornelia, "don't you suppose there are men who would be willing to marry me just for myself?"

"Perhaps," growled Blivin, "but if there are any such I'd like to know them first and be sure. Look here, I tell you flat that you shan't marry any man I don't approve of."

"You are too cruel," sobbed Cornelia, bursting into tears. "I'll marry any man I please and you shan't have a thing to say about it." And she dried her eyes and went home, smarting from her first rebuff.

She hardly spoke to her parents all that week, but Saturday night at dinner she calmly remarked that she was going to marry Casper White.

"Hum, hum, a good selection," said Blivin. "Excellent young man. I approve of your choice."

It never occurred to the man of millions that perhaps Casper White would have something to say in the matter.

Now there was a young man at the table when Cornelia made her announcement who frowned darkly. He was Walter Reynolds, a third cousin of Cornelia, who had been brought up by old man Blivin and was now his secretary. "White is engaged to Mabel Landers," said Walter sourly.

"What of it?" snapped Cornelia.

"Oh, that can be arranged, I guess," said Blivin. "The girl hasn't a cent."

"Has Mr. White paid you any special attention?" asked Mrs. Blivin.

"Well—no—not yet," replied Cornelia, "but he is three times as sensible as the other young men I meet in society. He's more like Walter here." The last part slipped out before she realized what she was saying; and she could have bitten her tongue off for the slip.

Walter was all very well as a cousin—but Cornelia had for some time had a suspicion that he aspired to be something nearer than a cousin. While everybody else let her do as she pleased and approved what she did, Walter had the cheek to object to many of her performances. What did she care what Walter thought? What was he to her, anyway? After dinner that Saturday night Walter and Cornelia happened to find themselves alone together in the library.

"Cornelia," said Walter, "you are a spoiled child, and you know it."

"I'm not," cried Cornelia.

"Yes you are," returned Walter. "You have had your way so long that you have ceased to realize that there are other people in the world to be considered. Now you are not, really, going to try to break up the engagement between poor little Mabel Landers and Casper White, are you?"

Now Cornelia was a good-hearted girl. "No," she faltered. "I don't know as I want to do that. But Casper has more common sense than most of the fellows I know, and I won't marry a fool."

"You said at dinner," stammered Walter, "that he was—"

"I said he was nearer like you—that's what I said," put in Cornelia. "Oh, well, I don't know as I want Casper after all."

"Whom do you want?" asked Walter looking at her eagerly.

"Gracious me," cried Cornelia, "have I got to tell you? Whom do you want?" Walter had her in his arms in a flash.

RECEIPTS

Calumet Biscuits.

4 Cups flour, 4 level teaspoons Calumet Baking Powder, 4 level tablespoons butter or lard, 1½ cups milk, 1 level teaspoon salt.

Sift flour once, then measure, add salt and baking powder and sift three times, rub shortening in with fork or spoon, add milk, mix lightly, turn out on a well-floured board and roll or pat one inch thick, cut and bake in quick oven (450 degrees F.) fifteen to seventeen minutes.

Shortcake Biscuits.

Make Calumet Biscuit, cut biscuits rather larger than ordinary. Split and butter biscuits while hot. Select any fresh fruit, crush it, and add enough sugar to make plenty of juice. Pour crushed fruit over and between biscuits just before serving. Strawberries, raspberries, blueberries, peaches, or any ripe or canned fruit can be used. In using canned fruits, drain from the syrup and cut into pieces. Whipped cream sweetened or flavored makes this doubly appetizing. This form of shortcake has become very popular because of its simplicity.

Pasture Rotation Reduces Parasites

Stomach Worms Are Among the Most Serious Pests.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The belief of progressive sheepmen that pasture rotation reduces the ravages of parasites among sheep and lambs received a scientific test last year at the Beltsville (Md.) farm operated by the United States Department of Agriculture. According to the report of the chief of the bureau of animal industry, just issued, that belief is correct. The government investigators found that a systematic rotation of forage-crop pastures enables lambs to reach market weight without visible effects of parasitic infestation.

The system, though keeping parasites in check, is not an absolutely sure method. While the frequent changes of pasture proved beneficial, they were not entirely adequate in the control of parasites of sheep carried throughout the year. Stomach worms are among the most serious pests attacking farm flocks, and for their complete suppression some method of treatment such as dosing with dilute copper-sulphate solution is desirable. Details of the method are obtainable without cost from the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C.

How to Kill Ox Warbles on the Backs of Cattle

The grubs so commonly found in "boils" on the backs of cattle during winter and spring are the larvae of the ox warble-fly developed from eggs deposited by the fly when cattle are grazing. They are the source of much misery to their hosts, and may reduce milk yield or prevent normal growth and development, besides causing tremendous economic loss by the damage they do to the hides for leather. In time this menace and mischief might greatly be lessened, or possibly eliminated, were every owner of cattle invariably to protect his animals from flies by free and frequent spraying with a reliable repellent, and by squeezing out and destroying every grub he can find. The extraction of a grub from a mature boil may readily be accomplished by pressing down hard on it with the open mouth of a large bottle. A mixture of one part of iodoform and five parts of lard should then be applied to the boil, and to immature ones, to induce healing or destroy forming grubs. Such treatment always proves profitable and certainly is humane.—Dr. A. S. Alexander.

Bring Dairy Cows Back to Normal Production

So far as I know there is literally nothing to the suggestion that clover seed will bring dairy cows which have slumped in their milking back to normal production, says a writer in the Rural New Yorker. Clover seed would be rated as a protein carrier, and the particular quality of protein which it would yield does not possess miraculous qualities. Evidently the proponents of such a theory have failed to observe that cows which have been fed largely on corn and oats and such carbohydrate carriers as these, do increase their flow of milk when any concentrated protein carrier such as cottonseed meal, linseed meal, gluten feed, or in this instance clover seed, has been supplied to bring the home-grown feeds into balance. Manifestly it would be foolish to use clover seed to feed cows because its cost is many times that of protein carriers which are intended for feeding purposes.

FARM FACTS

The worst resolutions are the ones that are not kept.

Crop rotation not only helps the soil; it discourages insects.

Cauliflower can be grown as you would early cabbage. Try some.

Lack of paint not only lets a building look ramshackle, it lets it rot.

A clean, disinfected poultry house gives the laying hens a chance to do their share.

Chickens and animals relish changes in their feed. Even the best of rations need some variety.

The first commandment in the farmer's decalogue is "Thou shalt not rob thy soil of its substance."

Now is a good time to lay out the fields and crops for the year. You have more time for thought than during the rush of spring work.

Calves born in the fall and adequately housed and fed will as a rule grow more rapidly and retain a more thrifty condition than calves which come in the spring and have to contend with the growth-deterring agencies flies and extreme hot weather.

Digging in Bill's Garden

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)

THE winter old Mrs. Fair had the pneumonia and never recovered, Bill Fair's ship was in port, so that he could come home and gladden his mother's last hours. When it was all over Bill, almost broken-hearted over the loss, and with no near relatives to share his sorrow, though all of Seaport sympathized with the fine young captain, locked the house up and sailed on his longest voyage to the Far East.

January, February and March passed, and on the first of April came visible spring.

"Henrietta Morton," said her mother severely, "what you been doing over to Bill Fair's yard?"

"Why, who told you I had been there?"

"Mrs. Beazley lives next door—isn't it perfectly natural for her to notice you traipsing around Bill's front yard, digging around? I repeat, what have you been doing over there?"

Henrietta sighed. "Just poking around the plants, mother. I hate to see them dying with no one to care for them."

"Humph!" sniffed Mrs. Morton, who as a flower lover herself could understand her daughter's feelings. "Of course after you've been teaching school all day you can't feel much like digging garden!"

"It is a change of work. Of course I have not neglected our own garden."

"No, you haven't—but, dear, the neighbors will be talking—they'll be telling that you're trying to attract Bill's attention. You know now that his mother's gone the house is his and the garden, and you'd feel foolish if he came home with some wife and found you'd been making his garden."

"She would be delighted, I'm sure," said Henrietta coolly, "and as for folks talking about us, you know Bill Fair is ten years older than I am. His mother was so loving about the flowers, always giving me a bunch when I passed by, that I couldn't bear to have them die out. It would make the place so dreary for Bill when he comes home."

Laura Morton laughed good-naturedly. "I thought you didn't even know Bill Fair, Hen," she uttered. "Did he ever come to see you?"

"Not exactly," stammered Henrietta, and walked away very ruffled in her feelings toward her sister. She had noticed Bill Fair's heartbroken glance at the little garden as he locked the house and went away; she was on her way to school and she was aware that he didn't even recognize her, so few were his visits to Seaport, but she did realize that he would never see his mother pottering about the tiny front yard that always seemed overflowing with bloom from April until November. She did not want him to know who had tended the garden, but wanted the garden just to be ready to bloom for him.

Capt. Bill Fair came home late in June. On the train from the city he found an old acquaintance in Lem Beazley. Lem was full of Seaport news, but the captain was only slightly interested. He was dreading the moment when he had to walk up the path to that locked door and view the neglected garden.

"S'pose you'll be getting married pretty soon?" snickered Lem. "I see your best girl's keepin' the home fires burnin'."

Captain Bill stared. "Yes?" and immediately changed the subject.

But Mr. Beazley was persistent. "Henrietta Morton certainly is a nice girl," he offered generously.

"Yes?" queried Bill, and he went back into the smoker again. "Now I wonder what he's driving at?" mused the simple sailor man. "Seems I do remember a Morton girl—away back five years ago—I was a shy fish in those days—it was at a box social at the church, and they auctioned off boxes of lunch, and I happened to buy the one she put up and we ate it together! She was a little dark thing with big eyes and a dandy smile. We sat together all the evening, and she got real lively and pretty. I saw her home—and never thought of her again!"

Approaching the front door was not the trial he had anticipated. Although the house was closely shuttered, the little front garden was spilling in fragrant bloom everywhere; roses, mignonette, sweet alyssum, pansies and mountain daisies, ribbon grass, feverfew, dusty miller, nasturtiums, sweet peas, marigolds, pinks—and last of all forget-me-nots, a great clump that flourished in a deep corner. Tears came into his fine eyes, and he blinked them back and opened the door. When he came out again the windows were all wide open to the fresh evening breeze. He stopped in the garden and picked a great bunch of flowers, and something from every plant, tying the whole with a blade of ribbon grass. Then he went up the street and turned into the Morton's gate.

"Henrietta home?" called Bill's big voice cheerily, and Mrs. Morton greeted him with motherly warmth and made him stay for supper. "These are for Henrietta," he explained, with a little thrill at the thought.

Old Mrs. Beazley nodded her head at her husband. "Captain Bill's courtin' Henrietta Morton," she declared excitedly.

And although Bill Fair didn't realize it, Mrs. Beazley was right.

Nowadays Henrietta makes the garden every spring, and no one says a word, for she belongs to it.

Changes in Harvesting the Wool Crop

Wool with a long, fine fibre brings the highest price. LEFT—Doing a smooth job with a machine shear.

There have been many changes in the operations of securing the wool crop. It has not been many years since it was considered necessary to clean the wool before it was taken from the sheep. This used to be done by driving the flock to a lake or stream where each animal was thoroughly washed. Modern methods of wool scouring have made sheep-washing unnecessary, although even today, a very dirty fleece is discriminated against by the buyer.

There are certain precautions observed by successful sheep owners at shearing time which have been found to increase the value of the clip. For example, bright days are selected on which to shear, as this will avoid obtaining fleeces wet with dew or rain. Do not shear sheep on the ground, but rather use a clean platform upon which to do the shearing operation. Keep the fleece in one piece, and clip off some of the inferior tags.

Changes have taken place in the method of removing the fleece from the sheep's body. Shearing sheep now is easy and simple compared with the old days of hand blades. Mechanics has done wonders towards solving many of the farm labor problems. Today, the automatic shearer, either hand or power operated, provides a quick and efficient method of harvesting the wool crop on the average farm as well as on the large sheep ranches. Machine shearing leaves no ridges and secures the maximum amount of fleece which is very important with wool at present prices.

For tying up each fleece, use, if possible, a paper twine. If binder twine is used, experience has shown that the fibres of the twine get into the wool, and as they cannot be removed, they are a damage to the resulting manufactured woolen goods. In preparing wool for shipment, large sacks which will hold several fleeces are used.

The program of sheep owners should include plans for most effectively harvesting a quality wool. The wool crop will be a large source of income this year, as it will be for years to come. High prices are being offered for the 1925 clip, and extremely satisfactory returns are assured. The changes that have taken place in the methods of harvesting wool are of great value to the sheep industry.

Soap Bubble as Eye Test

The tiniest things which the human eye can see are the black spots and patches sometimes visible in soap bubbles, said Sir William Bragg, lecturing recently on "Ray and Soap Films" at the Royal institution, reports the New York World.

The rainbow-colored soap films are, therefore, not the tiniest things the human eye can detect. The black areas are so thin that if the soap bubbles could be magnified to the size of the earth and the thickness of the enveloping film increased in proportion the film would then be only the thickness of a sheet of glass.

Canary Dealer Fined

Radio in Spain

Spain was almost the last of the older nations to take up radio seriously; but now over 100,000 licenses have been issued for the installing of receiving sets. There are many amateur broadcasting stations in the towns, employing up to the maximum power which is 100 watts. It is prohibited for an amateur to use a set with a wave-length between zero and 120 meters, so that very short wave transmission is virtually impossible for them. All amateur transmitting sets are subject to a tax of 200 pesetas which must be paid to the Spanish government annually.

WHITE DIARRHEA.

Save Them

Ashville, Ohio, R. F. D. 1, May 7, 1924.

Mr. Fickardt:—

I bought 400 chicks. Very soon the chicks began to die of WHITE DIARRHEA. My chicks kept on dying until I had lost 250 in two weeks.

At that time I had ten sick chicks and I really considered them as good as dead. I began to use your remedy with all my chicks, both well and sick. Eight of the sick chicks recovered and I have not lost any others since I began the use of Fickardt's Roup and Cholera Drops over a month ago.

I would have probably thought that the disease had run its course, if it had not been for the fact that those that were sick recovered; but seeing the sick ones get well has convinced me that your remedy cured them.

Lifted by Toy Balloons

On a recent visit to London Lady Poynter, author of travel books, met the old lady who sells balloons at the entrance to Kensington gardens, to bring joy to childhood. She said to Lady Poynter: "I am the old woman Barrie told the world about in 'Peter Pan,' who was nearly carried off by her balloons. Maggie Leary, the old apple woman, who sold apples for forty years by this gate, had to catch me by the handle of her umbrella, or I should have blown away. Lots of people have taken my photograph, and one man paid me half a crown for it. This has been the worst year I've had, but things are picking up. Maggie was here for forty years and I've been here for nineteen."

Evidently she enjoyed her celebrity, for she asked, "When will you come back and photograph me?"—Japan Advertiser.

Shows Value of Flattery

Speaking of police, the female of the species occasionally comes in for its share of responsibility to the jokesmiths. The following yarn hails from the beginnings of the lady-police era:

One of the newly appointed police women saw a carman treating his horse roughly. She went up to him and after remonstrating with him, demanded his name and address.

"Lord, miss," said the man with a commiserating smile; "if I was to tell you, it would go out of that pretty head of yours before you got to the next corner."

Then he drove off, leaving the policewoman torn between conflicting emotions of neglected duties and gratified vanity—San Francisco Argonaut.

Lizard Far From Home

An Australian bearded lizard (not a lounge lizard either) was recently found sunning itself on the railway track near Plaistow, near London, England. As the locality is in the dock area, it is supposed that the mysterious stranger landed there as a stowaway and was engaged on a tour of exploration. It has beneath the chin a fold of skin which, unnoticeable when the reptile is in repose, can be expanded into a conspicuous bristly frill, suggestive of a beard, for the purpose of frightening enemies. If this fails, it has a very effective weapon in its spiny tail, with which it can inflict serious wounds.

Mankind's Great Virtues

Those are necessarily the greatest virtues which are most useful to others: justice, courage, moderation, magnanimity, liberality, gentleness, reasonableness, wisdom.
